Nationals Drop Two To Huggins' Yankees

Miscues and Boots Along With Misjudgment Gives Yankees the Two Games.

Once more Clark Griffith's fighting ribe, the Nationals, was forced to defeat. They call him "Wee" Miller Huggins, but as "wee" as he was he presented a wrecking crew yeserday that simply proved this nom de plume was all wrong, as the Yanks aped in with a duet of victories. The morning game, an over-time battie, went to the visitors by a 4-to-2 score, while the afternoon battle, with a rechange line-up, managed to grab off a defeat of 6 to 2.

grab off a defeat of 6 to 2.

Dick Robertson was given wonderful support, as sensational stops and capture of long flies helped him overhis eight-inning route in the first encounter. Doc Ayers, with a 6-to-defeat checked against him, was lucky, as the Yanks walloped his offerings during his stay on the mound for 13 hits, and only sensational fielding kept the Nationals from being scored upon.

Ayers was lucky, but every fan who was present at the ball park yeaterday must remember the morning contest when Dick Robertson came through with top honors and relief hurfer Walter Johnson faltered in the attempt to rescue the Nationals in the first fray, while with an even score Clark Griffith's strategy failed to work against that of "Wee" Miller Huggins. Griffith's almost turned his line unvailed down his look during this double bill, as the of "Wee" Miller Huggins.
